I went by John Wylie's apartment one last time to check on him after church. Not only is he still not there (he's been gone this whole week) but his belongings are all still here, including his Playstation 3 and two TV sets. And there is a notice on his door saying his rent is past due. If he does not return soon, everything in that apartment will be removed and trashed. This is the very essence of being "flaky" as Tina Harmuth said to me last night. This is NOT what I expect from a responsible partner at all! It's like he just vanished without a trace.....and left me behind too.💔

Don't persue him. Just wait. Be patient, bring worried is natural, remember he is an adult. He knows the consequences of his actions. Find something constructive to do with your time do your not dwelling on where he is or what he's doing

This sounds more like something happened to him, rather than him simply flaking. Has anyone seen him?

Maybe file a missing person report?

If he turns up, it might be best to confront him about his disappearing acts. Be prepared to find him some help but if nothing is seriously wrong then it's probably time to announce to him that you two are no longer a couple. If he';s doing this and will continue to do this, then you deserve a much better romantic partner, Dale. This is just unacceptable.

When someone disappears once, I can overlook it. TWICE? That is absurd.

He hasn't been evicted! Proper notice, trial, Judge decision, and his appeal before curbing his stuff.

If so, then I can indeed cut my losses and feel lucky I did not go down with him.

Dale. Coming from someone who has known you for a long time, and being a part of the lgbt family, you need to stop thinking on you but be concerned about him. If his stuff is in his place with an eviction notice, then that's serious. His whereabouts regardless of where you two are at relationally needs priority. If he is hurt, wounded, in legal trouble, then those are the questions you should be trying to ask and answer.

I understand. He could call me at any time and tell me what happened. I have tried calling him several times this weekend and left messages. No answer.

Did you ever think that he can't call you... You have no idea what's going on with him.

I want to point out that Dale has been through this before, not being able to find or contact John. I agree that being worried for John is appropriate, but I'm also concerned about Dale if this is a pattern of behavior.

The last time he disappeared, a couple of weeks ago, he went to a specific hospital. I found out he was there via a Facebook post (why didn't he call me first?). I tried to call him. No answer. I went to the hospital to visit him, but he'd already been... See more

Dale I'm so sorry but you deserve someone who respects your worth and your time.
I stupidly put up with my daughter's father doing the same crap to me over and over again... It stinks and it really drugs down your self-esteem.
You're important. You're worthy. You deserve love - and the right kind.
I know it's easier said than done, but I would leave him

Yep, and so I have. I have always given my loves 100% of my committment and expected the same in return. I instead have been treated as an option rather than a priority, making the relationship one-sided. So I just unfriended John and will let him go.
